Hyperwalk is a small-batch sans-serif typeface designed in two weights for display and body text usage. It was designed by Dan Taylor in 2018 and has been constantly refined since then.

Hyperwalk was initially designed as a typographical logo for the music and multimedia project Pedestrian Tactics.

The limited character set was later refined to serve as headline text for the project's website and collateral.

In 2023 the typeface was expanded further with a thorough kerning table, additional punctuation, and diacritics for other latin-based languages.

The character set was born from the desire to strike a balance between relaxed readability and harsh geometric undertones. Capital and lowercase letters pay homage to brutalist typographical influences from Germany, Russia, Eastern Europe, and 1950s United States signage.

The initial weight of Hyperwalk was designed to resonate somewhere in between medium and bold faces in other sans-serifs.

Both faces are designed to play best together when used at different sizes. This is because the difference in stroke thickness isn't as apparent as other faces when used at the same size.

As the face was used more and more a lighter weight was designed specifically for readability at smaller sizes.

A unique feature of Hyperwalk is a strict vertical termination on straight angled strokes. Angled terminations on curved strokes like the "e", "s", and "a" adhere to the same angle.
